According to the Treatment Advocacy Center, 1 in 4 fatal police encounters ends the life of an individual with severe mental illness. At this rate, the risk of being killed is 16 times greater for individuals with untreated mental illness than for others approached or stopped by officers.

Those who are arrested are often charged with minor, nonviolent offenses, but as a result, our jail and prison systems are overcrowded with thousands of individuals who would be far better served by other community resources. The Mental Health Justice Act would address this by:

Creating a grant program to pay for hiring, training, salary, benefits and additional expenses for mental health provider first responder units.

- These mental health providers would act as a mental health emergency response team, deployed when 911 is called because someone is in a mental health crisis or related situation. Mental health providers would be the first on the scene to help the individual and could help them access appropriate community resources.

Providing expertise through technical assistance from the Disability Rights Section of the Civil Rights Division at the DOJ and from SAMHSA.

- States and localities would be able to apply for technical assistance from DOJ and SAMHSA if they choose to use their own funding for the program from another portion of the law enforcement budget to create a program that falls under these guidelines.

Creating mental health first responder units will help reduce violence against individuals with mental illnesses and intellectual and developmental disabilities, while also improving the safety of our communities. Mental illness is not a crime, and it's time we stop treating it as one.
